THE REAL ESTATE MARKET

TRADE REACTION AFFECTS SALE OF BUSINESS PROPERTY.

Alexander C. Milne Sells His Residence at 132 West Eighty-eighth Street-An Investor Buys a Plot on Hunt's Point Avenue as a Site for a New Building.

The collapse of the tenement house boom in Manhattan is generally explained n the theory that speculators and investors in residence property are transterring their capital to the outlying bornighs. The theory is supported by the building statistics for the first half of the current year. It is the more readily accepted because it falls in with the anticipated effects of improved transit in decentralizing population.

The suburban movement, however, does not account for the equally noticeable lecline of trading in businass premises. Dealing in such property was, next to the tenement house movement, the leading feature of the market until quite recently A month ago it was still agreed that the demand for mercantile realty in Manhattan was bound to grow steadily with the building up of the outlying residence section.

No doubt the argument remains valid in a general way, but just now it is impossible to discover any tendency on the part of the suburban expansion to react on business property in the central borough. During the week ended vesterday only two unimportant sales of mercantile premises were closed.

The fact seems to be that as a rule business houses in this town are experiencing a trade reaction and are in no position to buy realty. Many of them are, indeed, retrenching. Their spring trade was cut down by unseasonable weather and the need of economizing in the management of business enterprises has probably not been so insistent in a long time as it is this summer. Furthermore, the increased cost of borrowing money and carrying credits has helped to reduce mercantile

These conditions, meanwhile, are evidently temporary. By the time they disappear it will probably be found that the growth of the suburbs will have established a higher scale of values for business premises in the established trade districts of Manhattan. The opening of new tunnels and bridges is quite as certain to swell the crowds of shoppers here as it is to bring population to the city's out-we first offered lots for sale one year ago, and to-day between 30 and 40 cottages are built or under way; streets graded, sidewalks being laid and artesian water system installed. Every customer is an enthusiast and every tot will soon be sold.

KEANSBURG BEACH is on the Lower Bay, has a fine sandy bathing beach and a wooded park. It is in a celebrated truck, poultry and fruit raising country—fishing is good, all sea foods plentiful and cheap, and the character of the neighborhood is established by the fine class of people who have bought about 600 of the lots. There's no style nor rowdylsm, no merry-go-rounds or fakers—just a home resort for nice people who want quiet with the delightful combination of seashore and country. and country.

KEANSBURG BEACH is reached by train or via the magnificent Sandy Hook boats in a little over an hour from New York. We still have fine lots at $125 to $400 each (only a few higher); easiest terms if desired.
